PresenterNet Announces 'Team Selling' Capability for Web Conferencing

CAPISTRANO BEACH, CA—PresenterNet, provider of online interactive Web conferencing services, has added Team Selling capabilities to the company's online system.

Team Selling creates a multi-presenter environment for online Web conferencing. To utilize Team Selling, two or more PresenterNet users from locations anywhere in the world can temporarily link their accounts to a shared online conference room, and present to all audience members logged into that room. According to PresenterNet CEO Douglas Wolfgram, "We built this exciting capability at the request of our corporate customers with geographically diverse teams. It adds a whole new world of presentation excellence, by combining experts in diverse fields to present to any client or prospect audience."

The company has demonstrated several ways that customers use Team Selling. For example, a sales account manager in New York provides a presentation to a headquarters customer group. The program may require a special presentation segment from a CEO in Silicon Valley, along with a special segment from an engineering manager in India. Using Team Selling on PresenterNet, all presenters display slides from their personal online libraries, while speaking to the audience over a telephone conference bridge or a Skype VoIP (Voice over Internet Protocol) conference connection.

Presenters using Team Selling have full control of their own slides while they speak, and can also use PresenterNet's interactive slides to draw responses from online audience members. Interactive slides pose questions or request information from audience members onscreen. Each audience member can post responses with a few mouse clicks, and have their answers stored for use by all presenters for follow-up.
